NEIGHBORHOOD ECONOMICS

NOV 12 - 13

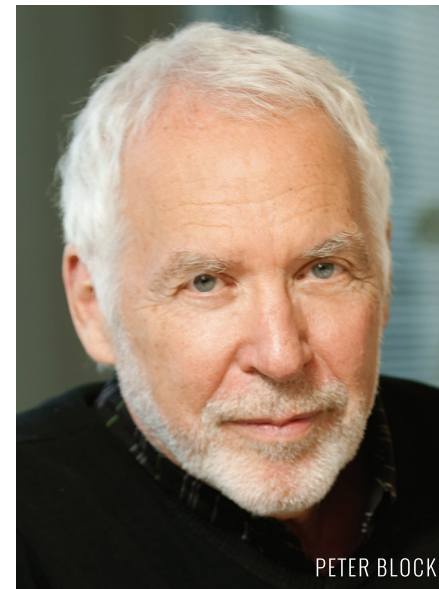

The Center for Interfaith Relations is proud to sponsor a two-day workshop on Neighborhood Economics, hosted by Social Capital Markets and the Parish Collective. Neighborhood Economics will explore the topic of whole communities and how to build economic resilience at the local level.

This two-day event features keynote talks by Walter Brueggemann, influential theologian and Old Testament scholar, and Peter Block, author, consultant and speaker on the topic of whole communities. In addition, there will be plenaries, breakout sessions and dialogue with local and national leaders working to build healthy communities sustained by local economies.

PETER BLOCK

"When you dissolve the narrative into facts, or data, or conquests, or management, then you don't have that empowering summoning glue that will sustain the transaction."

Walter Brueggemann

"The essential challenge is to transform the isolation and self-interest within our communities into connectedness and caring for the whole. The key is to identify how this transformation occurs. We begin by shifting our attention from the problems of community to the possibility of community."
